

HUMA1030 Structure of the Chinese Language [C] Spring 2025

Instructor: Dr. SZETO Pui Yiu (hmpyszeto@ust.hk)
Tutor: TBA
Time & venue: Wednesday 15:00–16:20 2502
 Friday 15:00–16:20 2502

Course description

This course offers an introduction to the Chinese language, suitable for students with no prior knowledge of linguistics. We will discuss the key aspects of the Chinese language, including its history, its sound structure, its lexicon and morphology, and its syntax. Throughout the course, we will pay special attention to the internal diversity of Chinese, such as the differences between Cantonese and Mandarin. Additionally, we will compare the characteristics of non-Sinitic languages spoken in neighbouring regions to those of Chinese varieties, highlighting the bidirectional influences between these language groups.

Intended learning outcomes

- Gain an understanding of the history of the Chinese language
- Examine the typology of the Chinese language, including its phonology, morphology, and syntax
- Identify the similarities and differences between major varieties of Chinese, especially Cantonese and Mandarin
- Appreciate the linguistic diversity of China
